

Description

You can use the PrintWhen expression to print an object on every other record. In this case, a shaded graphic shape is printed on every other row to simulate a ledger report.

Description

You can use the PrintWhen expression to change the fontstyles printed based on the values being printed. In this case, the detail line is printed in red for those products whose in stock is below the reorder level. Also, any products that have been discontinued are printed in strikeout.

Note: this example uses an older strategy for handling conditional formatting. With latest version of VFP, you can use a ReportListener class to handle the same scenario.
